Jan Singer Featured in New York Times

Excerpts from the "New York Times Corner Office" article. Interview was conducted and condensed by Adam Bryant

Q. Tell me about your early years. What were some important influences for you?

A. I grew up in Brockton, Mass. It's a shoe-manufacturing town south of Boston. My mom was a nurse in the same hospital for 51 years, and my dad was an accountant. I have two brothers, and I'm the middle child. That matters because I like connecting and bringing people together. I'm also tall, and that matters, too. When you walk into a room, you can't hide. People notice you right away, and you have to be present and aware of that.

I'll never forget the day my aunt gave my mom a copy of W magazine. I opened it and saw $10,000 Bill Blass dresses and all these gowns. It seemed like art to me, and I became obsessed about fashion in high school. Who were these people? Where did they come from? My parents took me to New York in my freshman year of high school. When I saw the city, I said, "This is it. This is where it happens." I remember everything about that moment. I had goose bumps the whole time.

And so you studied fashion in college?

I actually studied psychology and business management. I had studied a lot of psychology through high school, always trying to learn more about the people around me, and wondering, "How do I fit in? Who am I?" I read a lot about different types of therapy and about the fact that I could change my belief system, and that if I did, my actions and my consequences would change. I felt very empowered. I had this irrational belief, and I still have it, that anybody can do anything. I also figured that I could apply what I learned in psychology — how people operate, what drives them — to anything.

And after college, what did you do?

I went to Manhattan, but I didn't have any contacts. I just started circling help-wanted ads. I needed a job, and I started working as a secretary for a company that was buying up real estate and converting buildings to co-ops. Then there was a glitch in the business and they started laying people off. I had to start packing up my desk.

On my desk was a lease from one of our clients with a return address of Chanel on the envelope. I stared at it for a day and a half. I've got to call this person. What's the worst thing that could happen to me? So I picked up the phone — I can literally remember the number to this day — and told them I had their lease but I was going to hand it off to a colleague because I was leaving the firm. He said, "Where are you going?" And I said, "Well, I came here to work in fashion and beauty, and I notice you work at Chanel. Is there anyone I can call?" And he said, "Yeah, call this person," who was the head of H.R.

I didn't know who this man on the phone was. So I called the receptionist and asked for his title. "Oh, he's the president of the company," she said. I got hired. The universe sometimes throws you things, and I think you have to see it and be willing to jump.

What advice do you give to new college grads?

Never stop learning. If you have it all figured out, you're dead. You have to be open, and you have to listen and to learn. You may feel a bit exhausted from all the learning in college, but find what energizes you and keep learning.

Chamber Hosts Neil Bluhm to Discuss Casino Future

The application process continues for Brockton to receive the available state gaming license required to move forward with plans for developing a resort casino and entertainment destination on the site of the Brockton Fairgrounds. Since the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs announced it would grant the Mashpee Wampanoag tribe the 155 acres in Taunton needed to build a $500 million Indian casino, the question of Brockton receiving the gaming license has grown stronger. However, gaming commissioners agreed to continue Brockton's application process regardless of the casino prospect in Taunton, and opened a two-week period for residents and business owners to submit feedback.

Although the commission received hundreds of letters and emails both in support and against a Brockton resort casino, many business owners and Chamber members in Brockton and the Metro South region wrote to the Mass Gaming Commission in support of the project.

Peter Neville, president of Concord Foods and Chamber Board member wrote, "As the largest manufacturer in Brockton, I know firsthand how a vibrant and fiscally healthy city directly benefits business. A resort casino in Brockton will bring important revenue into the city and help revitalize the region."

Member Brian DeLano, co-owner of Weiss Sheet Metal in Avon said, "This not only benefits the city's coffers, but also local businesses that will get a huge boost with an increase in tourism and economic development."

During this time, Neil Bluhm, chairman of developer Rush Street Gaming, came to the Metro South Chamber of Commerce to meet with key individuals in the City of Brockton and the resort casino project to discuss the future of the casino.

Neil Bluhm, developer and chairman of Rush Street Gaming discusses the plans for the proposed resort casino in Brockton, designed to fit with Brockton's character and history

Survey Solicits Parking Preferences in Brockton

The Brockton Parking Authority and City of Brockton are working to complete a study that will create a plan to enhance and improve the management of parking in downtown. An online survey, many business and resident interviews, and two public meetings are planned to help the city gather information and public insights.

As the City develops its master plan and continues to revitalize the downtown area to support both locals and visitors, it recognizes these plans must be supported by smart parking policies in order to be functional and sustainable.

The consultants working on the project, Nelson\Nygaard, will consider how parking is affected by street design and circulation patterns, signage, enforcement, public transportation, and ongoing development initiatives.

Finally, to find out what does and doesn't work when parking downtown, the City of Brockton is calling for community input. As one of the first and most important steps of the analysis, please take the study's online survey at brocktonparkingstudy.com.
